22	Michael McMahon, Web Developer for the Free Software Foundation (https://www.fsf.org/about/staff-and-board). He presented at a DCSLA event and did an excellent job. He talked about some really great Free Software that librarians should know about. Side note: Free Software apparently means something completely different than what I originally thought. Michael was a really great speaker and I think it would be good for librarians to know more about some of the thing he knows a lot about.	Another speaker I would like to recommend is Marc Smith (https://www.mojeek.com/about/) who is the founder of Mojeek, an alternative search engine that is entirely centered around user privacy. They do not rely on Google or Bing at all so it would be interesting for us to learn about their product and how they are developing it as something different from the big guys in the search engine business.	12/1/2021 9:18 AM
23	Why can't we get a professional from the industry side of how they have used librarians? Someone who can say "I really wish that I had know you could do _____ for me".... someone who says "when I have to make a monetary business decision, this is why I often cut libraries... I don't see the value, so what you need to show me is._____."	12/1/2021 8:44 AM

10	I need intermediate-advanced academic librarianship leadership skills workshops. almost nothing is offered at SLA for this so it would be a new area to attract (and retain) experienced academic librarians. My university would likely pay for this but not for the current certificates. Also the skills are probably somewhat transferrable to other areas of the information profession when taught effectively but my university will be more eager to pay if they know there is an academic librarian focus. Otherwise I will need to go somewhere else - I prefer the network in SLA but currently the content is not high enough level and/or types of topics to get full support from my employer. So I pay out of pocket most of the time and need to go to other association conferences for content. We are missing a big opportunity here. Many of us do not want to go to ALA unless we absolutely have to. ACRL is better but I prefer the diversity of info pros at SLA when possible	12/3/2021 7:52 AM
